U.S. FASHION PUBLICIST JOINS CROCODILE HUNT

In spite of feeling that a second visit would ruin the new emotion Port-au-Prince had introduced to her on her first trip in 1949, Terry Mayer was back in town last week, leaving David Crystal and Co. [New York] to fashion a way for them selves.

Clutching to memories of those bicentenaire fete days, she landed at the Villa Creole, and did a quick double take in the completely new surroundings of flourishing hotels, buildings, art, restaurants, night clubs. The little Manhattan maiden was induced to participate in the most thrilling of sports meeting the inhabitants of Haiti's Etang Saumatre ou Lac only an hour from Port au ruptures the Dominican border line in the middle. Supplies were brought from the vessel while the croc took a fifteen minute dizzy spell. Chasseur Martin nailed it through the right eye at a rough 50 feet causing instantenous haemorhag ing to the left. L'Hopital conser vatively withdrew it from the marsh by the tail. The boat boys, under protect then carried it to the charcoal carrier. OBSEQUIES Professor Kohler then gave a learned dissertation on the metamorphosis and death of the «caiman», at which the croc was so moved it raised from the dead, heaving itself to its feet and waddling towards the water.
